An Albanian-Greek Story with a Prestige Solution

Prestige was recently approached by a client asking for a linguist who could help communicate with an Albanian boy brought up in Greece. With very short notice we were able to provide exactly what the youngster, who was separated from his mother, needed - an Albanian fluent in Greek!

A word from a client (actually, many words!)

I would like to congratulate Prestige Network for being efficient and friendly, which is a winning combination. Efficiency is vital if you are planning a project and relying on an outside agency to provide a major part of the work. In my experience, it was our side that failed to work while Prestige delivered on time. But for me, it is the friendliness that makes the difference. I work with many people and organisations on a number of different projects. When there is humour and enjoyable exchange, the communication becomes a pleasure and work is not such a bad place to be. It takes no extra time but adds immeasurably to the success of the job.

...efficiency...
...friendliness...
...humour...
...pleasure ...

Thanks to Shawn especially for that. And good luck to Prestige for the future.

Last quarter we won three major contracts. The first one was for all our services across a government department. Another was a Scottish translation project in the health sector. The third contract awarded was for a hospital in the North-East to cover provision of material in alternative formats, such as different Languages, Voice Recording and Braille.

Recommendations

The majority of our work comes through recommendations and referrals. So why not tell others if you have experienced our professional and friendly service!
